

Defining Figurative Language

Figurative Language is language used to convey something different from the word's dictionary definition. It transforms the text from something simple and flat to something that is complex and multi-dimensional. Figurative language encompasses many different types of literary techniques and devices.

Definitions and Examples of Figurative Language

Simile: when like or as is used to make a direct comparison of two objects.

Example: Cierra is as cunning as a fox.

Example: He had such a long day at work that he slept like a log at night.

Metaphor: when a comparison of two unlike objects is made.

Example: Angry words cut deeper than a knife.

Example: The assignment was a breeze.

Symbolism: when something is used to represent an entirely different object or concept.

Example: Using the American flag to represent patriotism.

Example: The color black represents evil and death in some cultures.

=f c b m using language or ideas that normally signifies the opposite, often for humor purposes.

9l Ua d`Y: The world's biggest cat's name was Tiny.

9l Ua d`Y: The fear of long words is called Hippopotomonstrosesquippedaliophobia.

: i fh Yf 5gg]ghUbW: For more detailed help or if you have questions, visit the Writing Center located in the Lewis University Library or call 815-836-5427.

Gci fWg 7cbgi `hYX: literarydevices.net, grammar.yourdictionary.com